Memorandum to: Midwest Market News Offices

From: J. C. Baker, Chief, Midwest Area, Marketing
Information Division

Subject: Directory of Midwest Radio Stations.

The enclosed directory of radio stations in the Midwest was compiled at the request of some area market reporters for a list of stations in the territory they cover. They plan to visit as many stations as time permits, to let the stations know their reports are available; and to learn ways in which the reports might be improved. We thought you might like to do the same sort of thing as time permits, and so we listed all the radio stations in 11 states.

If you provide your market report to one or more of the wire services (AP, UP, INS) you might like to learn from the local bureau what distribution your report receives: covering one state, part of a state, a region, or coast-to-coast.

Then, before you visit a radio station, you can check the directory to learn what wire service the station subscribes to; combine the two pieces of information and you usually can tell if the station receives your report.

When you visit a radio station, the Farm Program Director (if the station has one) is the logical man to ask for. Second choice, the Program Director. You may find changes from the names given in the directory, because radio people seem to do a lot of moving, but generally, the name of a former staff member is a better door-opener than no name at all.

If a station receives your report but does not use it, there may be a perfectly good reason, or it may be your cue for some friendly persuasion based on what you know of production in the station's area. If a station does not receive your report because its wire service doesn't provide it, the station can exert the most influence in persuading the wire service to carry it.

TO MIDWEST MARKET NEWS REPORTERS

This directory has been prepared especially to help you in any efforts to gain wider distribution of your reports by means of radio.

- Most farmers depend principally upon radio for market news.
- No other medium can reach so many farmers so quickly.
- Most stations consider market news as effective "bait" for attracting farm listeners.

You probably can increase radio use of your reports by exploring the coverage in your local area, by getting acquainted with radio station people, especially farm directors and program directors, by learning their program schedules, and by maintaining personal contact.

This directory should help in this effort by providing-----

1. Call letters and locations of radio stations that are potential users of your reports.
2. Names of farm directors and program directors.
3. Identification of the wire news service (Associated Press, United Press, or International News Service) which serves each station, and consequently is a means of getting your reports to a given station.
